Abstract

This handlist aims to list all books on medicine or related disciplines published in Britain between 1475 and 1640, with the Short Title Catalogue numbers of their editions. Appendices include printers and publishers of medical books over this period. The aim is to provide a useful aid to those undertaking research into medicine in the early modern period.

Introduction

This handlist grew out of the frustrations of trying to identify works related to medicine in the early modern period. Most works from this period are now catalogued, and many are microfilmed and readily available in most universities. Identifying which might be helpful, unless they have already been cited in published sources, is, however, very difficult, especially for those who are new to research into early modern Britain. The completion of the second edition of Pollard and Redgrave's Short Title Catalogue of Books Printed in England, Scotland and Ireland and English Books Printed Abroad 1475-1640,¹ seemed an ideal time to start to compile a systematic handlist, and to cross-reference it to the now extensive microfilm collection of these works produced by University Microfilms.² This handlist aims to be a comprehensive list of all British books (with certain defined limits) which relate to medicine, published between the beginning of printing and 1640, with classification by author, broad subject area, date of first publication, printer and publisher. It is also meant to be portable and affordable.

Such a handlist does not at present exist, although this is not the first occasion on which compiling such a list has been attempted. A checklist published by Russell in 1949 catalogues all works identified in the 1926 edition of the Short Title Catalogue, but the majority of works now known had not been catalogued at that stage.³ S. V. Larkey started a handlist, and I was fortunate to be able to use his unpublished papers, but he never completed it.⁴ A comprehensive list of books related to medicine published prior to 1605 was compiled by Paul Slack before the second edition of the Short Title Catalogue was published. The overview of medical books which Slack published on the basis of this work has influenced much of the thinking behind the current handlist, but the list of books he drew up was never published in full.⁵ Charles Webster compiled a list similar to Slack's for the period after 1600, but as with Slack's list, this was based on the first edition of the Short Title Catalogue, and has likewise never been published.⁶ In the new edition of the Short Title Catalogue many new works have been catalogued, and the STC numbers of many old ones changed. In many ways this handlist can be seen as complementary to Slack's article and to work by Webster and others on medical books of the period.

This handlist is not designed to be a great work of scholarship, and was initially started when I was an undergraduate trying to be systematic about sources used in research. It is meant to be helpful to those undertaking research into medicine and related fields in the early modern period. There are two intended audiences. One is those just starting out on a project, as a way of identifying relevant works; it is hoped it will be particularly useful to those who are not experienced users of the various sources of information available. The other audience is those who are already familiar with the period who wish to have a portable bibliography which includes microfilm numbers.

Jackson, F. S. Ferguson and K. F. Pantzer, 3 vols (London, The Bibliographical Society, 1976, 1986, 1991).

The basic aim is a bold one, and one which if perfectly executed would be welcomed by most people working in the field. Inevitably there are imperfections. Some of these are bound to be due to mistakes or ignorance on my part, and some are inherent in the methodology. However, if this publication makes life easier for even a handful of those researching this fascinating period it will have been well worthwhile. Much of the rest of this introduction is meant to indicate where the limitations and errors may lie, and to explain conventions and abbreviations used.

Limitations and sources of error

1) The basis of this handlist is the second edition of the Short Title Catalogue of Books Printed in England, Scotland and Ireland and English Books Printed Abroad 1475-1640, hereafter referred to as the Short Title Catalogue or STC. This great work, which will be well known to anybody involved in research on the early modern period, forms the backbone of all bibliographical research into early modern Britain. For those who are not familiar with it, the STC is as complete a catalogue as possible of all publications in English or published in Britain in any language in this period. Each edition is assigned a unique number (the STC number) which is the best shorthand to use in referring to a work. The STC contains all known information on publication date, printer and publisher, format, which libraries hold copies, and in some cases other information. The third volume has a particularly full listing of the output of all publishers and printers, as well as the best estimation of the publication dates of all works. For more information the reader should refer to the introduction to the STC and all its appendices. This handlist only contains works which are in the STC.

This sets the first limitation. The handlist does (in theory) contain all works in English wherever they were published, as well as books in Latin, Greek or other languages published in Britain. It does not contain books published abroad by British authors but not in English. In practice this is only a significant problem for works by physicians; even where surgeons or other practitioners published in Latin it was usually in Britain. Certain very important works are however excluded because of this; probably the best known are Harvey's experiments on circulation.

2) The first stage of compiling this handlist was to identify all possible works which might be included. There were two methods used. One was to use bibliographies and reference lists from recent publications on the history of medicine, and to identify all works referred to which are found in the STC. The second was to read the titles for every entry in the STC and note down all which could potentially be related to medicine. The majority of titles were identified by this second method.

The limitations in this stage of the method are errors of omission. Whilst every effort has been made to identify works related to medicine, some are bound to have been missed, and the extent to which this is a flawed work will depend on how many. If users come across any glaring omissions it would be very kind if they could let me know so that an updated edition can be prepared in due course.

3) Some works which sound from the title as if they are medical, are not. A few examples of these are given in Appendix 1; books on the plague are particularly misleading, but almost any theological, political or moral work can have a medical-sounding title. The next stage was trying to identify all of these so that they could be excluded. All books which seemed in any way doubtful were read, and if unrelated to medicine removed from the list. It proved impossible to obtain copies or microfilms of a few, and these are indicated in the text as dubious. Not every single work in the handlist has been read, and it is possible that some have slipped in which are totally unrelated to medicine, but it is hoped very few. Again, if readers identify any it would be very good to know about it.

4) Certain specific categories of book were excluded on the grounds that they are a) of very specialist interest or b) are all grouped together in the STC and are therefore easy to identify. Examples are Bills of Mortality (unless part of a larger work), Acts of Parliament, and advertisements for spas. There is a list of all categories excluded en bloc in Appendix 1.

5) The most difficult, and by far the most potentially controversial stage of the procedure was to try to define what is a book related to medicine. If fifty people interested in medicine were presented with the same thousand titles and asked to define which were medical, each person would come up with a different answer. Even in our own period the borderline between what is 'medical' and what is not is blurred. This is even more the case in the early modern period. Numerically most medical practitioners, and a large number of medical writers, were not medically trained in any academic sense. The distinction between theology and medicine was not clear-cut; surgeons would write of the fact that disease was a judgment by God, whilst priests wrote out medicinal treatments for syphilis.⁷

The guiding principle has been to be as inclusive as possible within the limitations outlined in paras 1-4 above. It is better that someone doing research reads a book that is of only peripheral relevance, than that they are left unaware of the existence of a potentially valuable source. Some readers may quarrel with some of the decisions to include a book, in which case they may strike them out at will. A list of books which were considered of very borderline relevance is given after the 'main' list.

6) This handlist is intended to be easy to use, and not all details included in the STC are reproduced. Holdings details and format information are the main exclusions, along with some editorial information, especially on early works. This list does not purport to be a substitute for the STC, and readers are urged to consult the STC if further information is required. On the other hand, there is some information given here which is not in the STC - in particular all STC titles which have been microfilmed by University Microfilms have been correlated with a reel number (UMF number) which it is hoped will be a considerable saving on time.

7) STC notation has generally been followed. Some conventions are listed below or in the relevant sections. There are however a few important changes in this handlist. Dates have been given immediately after the STC number as I think this is easier to read. The STC sometimes gives an amended date - for simplicity this has not been given. Some titles have been slightly shortened. Place of publication is given in English unless there is a reason not to do so. There are also a couple of titles which should probably be re-classified (e.g. STC 23930 will probably be re-classified as STC 11976.5), but which have been left as presented in the second edition of the STC. Readers are strongly urged to consult the Short Title Catalogue before including titles in a bibliography, both because the information is fuller, and because even after several re-perusals the typographical error rate in the STC is likely to be lower than in this handlist.

⁷ For a discussion of this, see Slack, 'Mirrors of health and treasures of poor men'; H. S. Bennett, English Books and Readers 1475-1557 (Cambridge, Cambridge University Press, 1970). For a more general discussion of the professional target audience, see M. Pelling and C. Webster, 'Medical practitioners', in Webster (ed.), Health, Medicine and Mortality, pp. 188ff. The difficulties involved in defining 'medical' works are demonstrated by the different books that Webster and Slack classify as medical for the years where their two lists overlap.

This list of potential weaknesses and problems has been included in the interests of transparency. Whilst any attempt to compile a list of all books related to medicine in the early modern period is bound to have potential flaws, it is hoped that this handlist will make research easier and more productive.

Acknowledgements

Without the help, guidance and encouragement of Margaret Pelling of the Wellcome Unit for the History of Medicine, Oxford, and of Susannah MacBain of the Royal College of Arms, this handlist would never have been completed. I would also like to acknowledge the help of many librarians at the Bodleian Library, the British Library, the National Library of Scotland, and Sussex University. The Wellcome Trust kindly met travel costs with a project grant.

Some of the conventions used in the STC and this handlist

Use of brackets: in titles or comments, square brackets are used to denote editorial information. Curved brackets (parentheses) contained within titles are as occurring in the original. For dates and printers or publishers, the use of curved brackets means that the information has been determined from some part of the publication, while the use of square brackets means it has been obtained from some external source. This convention is not always followed rigorously in the first edition of the STC.

Dates: where these are known exactly they are followed by a full stop. Where they are located to within 2-3 years, they are followed by a question mark. Where they are known to within 5 years they are preceded by circa (e.g., c. 1500). Circa followed by a question mark denotes greater uncertainty. Dating has followed the main lists in the STC – there is a slightly different dating scheme in the Chronological Index in Vol. 3 of the STC.

Note: there is a great wealth of information on many subjects in the introduction to the STC, Vol. 1, and in the Appendices in Vol. 3. If extensive use is made of the STC, or of this handlist, the reader may well want to consult this information in addition.

Appendix 2 Books listed by main subject area

This division of books into subject areas is only indicative; many books fall into several different categories, while others fall into no obvious category at all. The division is meant as a practical guide to those interested in particular areas, and also to allow those with a specialist interest in a particular area to quickly see if there are any glaring omissions. As the divisions are so subjective, nothing can be usefully deduced from the numbers of books in any subject area. STC numbers only are given, and several different titles may be covered by a single range (usually books attributed to the same author). Numbers in brackets indicate that the books are not in the 'main' list.

Books on the preservation of health

STC 3373, 3378.5-82, 4033-35, 4040-42, 5478-84, 6164, 6905, 7642.5-57, 11125, 11809.5, 11967-76, 12130-39.5, 13239.5-42, 14724-25, 15195-96, 17207, 18218a-225.8, 18513, 21596-604, 24612-18, (12191-92).

Appendix 4 Books listed by printer

The format is to give name of printer followed by the STC numbers of all the books they printed from the main list. Where there is only one name (who may be either printer or publisher, or in some cases both) the entry is asterisked. Where more than two printers' names appear the second name is in the footnotes. Alternative spellings are in square brackets.
