

SUMMARY REGISTER OF MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS
IN BRISTOL c.1716-1800

EDITED BY

Electronically Published by BRISTOL RECORD SOCIETY
OCCASIONAL SERIES NO. 9
JULY 2024

This register was designed from the outset to be an electronic publication as part of Bristol Record Society's Occasional Series. This series is aimed at making research materials available to students, scholars and the public. The works are less formal publications than the Bristol Record Society's standard record volumes. As such, the level of editorial checking and proof reading is lower and the publications have not been typeset professionally. This does not mean, however, that the value of the material is any lower.

Introduction

This list is intended to accompany the much fuller Biographical Register of Medical Practitioners in Bristol c.1500-1715, which covers anyone whose medical career is likely to have begun by 1715 (some such careers lasted until the 1770s).¹ People practising in Bristol after 1715 who are included in the Biographical Register are listed here only in brief. The entry for these individuals is preceded by an *, the name is recorded in bold and a different format used (e.g. ‘Roger ADAMS barber-surgeon (b. 1686-1724+)’). Similarly, individuals named in an entry who have their own reference in the Biographical Register are recorded in bold (e.g. Roger Dixon). The surname is given as it appears in the Biographical Register for ease of reference – this may not be the spelling used in the sources cited in the current work.

To get a full record of medical practice in eighteenth-century Bristol, both registers must be consulted. Approximately 2,700 people are listed in the current register, of whom 330 are also in the earlier Biographical Register. The current register includes 563 Bristol apprentices who are not known to have practised subsequently. Names are also given of over 600 wives/husbands of those practitioners. Many of the wives will have worked with their husbands in their practices, but only those who can be found practising separately from their husbands are given individual entries.

The summary register provided here merely gives brief details of careers, plus information on medical relatives and the names of wives or business partners. It is based on a much fuller set of information held by Jonathan Barry, who should be contacted at J.Barry@ex.ac.uk if you wish to discover what further information is held on a particular person/people. The primary sources used to compile this summary register are largely those identified in the introduction to the Biographical Register (pp. 4-10). The main extra sources not identified there are the Bristol newspapers, Bristol trade directories (1775, 1785, 1792, 1794) and national medical registers (1779, 1783) printed after 1775.

The term Bristol is used here more loosely than the city/county of Bristol as formally defined in this period. It includes those practising in the outparishes of St Philip and Jacob (Barton Regis) and St James in Gloucestershire, in Clifton (including the Hotwells) and Bedminster, in adjoining parts of Westbury on Trym and in some cases from other nearby parishes where it seems likely they were practising in Bristol. It may be noted that Bath physicians may well have also come across to the Hotwells or catered to Bristol clientele, but only those where this is clearly documented as a regular practice are given here. Similarly, Bristol practitioners were probably operating in the city’s hinterland, even at Bath.

Time-wise, the dates 1715-1800 are approximate – in particular, I have not analysed all the sources post-1775 as fully as for the earlier period. Only the burgess books and apprentice registers have been examined exhaustively. Despite this, the existence of trade directories and contemporary medical registers (as well as poll books) for the period 1779-94 make it likely that most people operating in the period to 1794 are captured here.

The term medical practitioner is understood broadly here, as in the Biographical Register, to include those catering to the care of the body through ‘barbering’ services as well as those we might now regard as strictly ‘medical’. Traditionally, medicine was divided between three broad groups: physicians, educated in a learned tradition to focus on the body's internal mechanisms and broader health issues; surgeons trained by apprenticeship to deal with injuries and external bodily conditions; and apothecaries who were also trained by apprenticeship to prepare and sell medicines. But in practice these categories overlapped not least when, as at sea, a single practitioner might have to offer all three services, while both surgeons and apothecaries might offer medical advice which physicians considered their prerogative. Furthermore, there was no clear divide between medicine and other forms of care for the body, especially for the condition of the skin/face/hair. In 1715 the 'barber-surgeon' straddled both barbering and surgical services, while many of them also acted as perukemakers (wig makers). I have not sought to distinguish the terms 'periwigmaker' and 'perukemaker' here, as there seems to be no significance in the different terms, just as 'chirurgion' and 'surgeon' are treated as identical. The overlap between barbers and surgeons may seem strange to modern eyes, but both shared the need/ability to prepare/use sharp blades and manage potential bleeding. By the later eighteenth century there is clear evidence of the fissuring of the occupations as perukemakers (and the new term 'hairdressers' as wig use declined) become much less often called 'barber-surgeons', let alone 'surgeons'. But there is no sharp or sudden break in naming practices, as the terms listed for many in the register makes clear. So it would be misleading and unhelpful to exclude any of these categories in the current register, particularly for scholars attempting to analyse change over time in these linked occupations.

In this period, it also makes no sense to try to distinguish apothecaries from druggists or chemists. On the other hand, I have excluded farriers (carers for animals, especially horses) and distillers from this register: in Bristol I have found no evidence of anyone caring for both animals and humans, and only stray cases of apothecaries overlapping with distillers. More commonly, however, medical practitioners had sidelines in linked occupations, which in a few cases became their major source of income. So apothecaries might become involved in other chemical/manufacturing processes such as paint/oils, sugar and, most famously in Bristol's case, chocolate manufacture. Equally surgeons, who often practised upon Bristol's ships, in some cases became active as mariners or traders more than as medical men per se. It may also be noted here that many of those identified in this register as 'ship's surgeons' may never have been resident in the city. This includes those recorded as working on Bristol-based ships and many of those whose probate affairs were dealt with in Bristol. Some, ship's surgeons, however, might have spent long periods in dock, probably catering to their crew and possibly others. Many of these surgeons were Scottish and were not trained in Bristol, but they have been noted here.

More serious is the absence in my register of most women who would have been providing medical services. Only 63 women have full entries here. That is just over 2 percent of entries. However, as noted above, more than 600 wives are named. Many will have worked with their husbands, and some, such as daughters or widows of practitioners, may have brought husbands into their practice. The register excludes both men and women who provided medical care as part of their family or charitable duties, as opposed to for remuneration. But even so, there must have been many women who were paid for nursing, caring/curing or acting as midwives who are not recorded here. Since Bristol lacks any set of licences for such people, or of prosecutions of them for acting in what was a free market, these women are largely invisible in official or business records. So the few women recorded are those where stray references survive, and may be entirely unrepresentative. Only women who continued their husband's businesses as widows by taking further apprentices are recorded with any regularity. Yet this becomes rarer over time, with only one example after 1750.

In addition to the more respectable medical practitioners, there were probably numerous unorthodox male practitioners. Those who advertised their services in the newspapers are noted, and very occasionally ‘quacks’ were denounced in these same papers by name. Yet, we do not know the scale of such provision. That the formal records miss many medical practitioners can be illustrated by the case of William Dyer. The register includes the William Dyer apothecary who was apprenticed and freed, then took his own apprentices. Yet it does not include the accountant William Dyer, who practised medicine charitably. His interventions included pharmacological remedies and electrical therapy, which he even offered to regular medical practitioners listed in this register.² The growth of newspaper advertisements also allows us to capture some of the many itinerant specialists in services such as bonesetting, treatments of the eye and ear and specialist conditions, and the emergence of the dentist. Only at the very end of the period did Bristol residents begin to specialise in these roles.

Structure of the Entries

1. Surname, first names followed by all the terms used to designate the person's occupation in various records. What appears to be the most common version of someone's name is usually given first, with major variants noted, but similar names are clustered together for convenience – so for example variants with 'i' or 'y' (e.g. Winter and Wynter) are put together here – hence the list is not strictly alphabetical. To avoid potential confusion regarding occupational labels, the term 'and' is rendered by a hyphen, so 'barber-surgeon [the only term hyphenated in the original documents] and perukemaker' is rendered 'barber-surgeon-perukemaker' here, while further terms are marked by a forward slash '/'. So, for example Alexander Abell appears in different documents as 'barber-surgeon and perukemaker', as 'barber and perukemaker' and as 'barber'. He is rendered here as 'barber-surgeon-perukemaker/barber-perukemaker/barber'. Where it is clear that a change of term follows a career development, this is indicated by 'then' or 'later', so for example Samuel Barry senior was initially an apothecary but later became a physician (and called 'Doctor of Physic'). So he is rendered 'apothecary later physician/Doctor of Physic'. If someone was apprenticed in Bristol, but there is no evidence they later practised there, then the word APP (Apprenticed): proceeds the entry. Less detail is given about such individuals, such as details of parentage or value of premium. Those who wish to find this information can consult the Bristol apprentice registers or the Inland Revenue records. If someone took out Bristol freedom (almost always to vote in late eighteenth century elections) but there is no other evidence that they lived or practised medicine as an adult in Bristol, then the entry is in italics; otherwise all this information is in bold.
2. Bracketed material (all in bold or italics). This summarises careers, largely chronologically using the following format:
 - a) date of birth/baptism if known, indicated by 'b.' (born) – where a rough date is known c. (circa) is added. Where birthdate is not given, but apprenticeship is dated, it would be reasonable to assume the apprentice was 14-17 years old and calculate birth date accordingly.
 - b) It often then proceeds with '17xxapp' indicating a date of apprenticeship, and for those who proceeded beyond apprenticeship this is followed by information on parental background and premium paid, if any/known. So, for example, Cornelius Adams was apprenticed in 1729 as the son of a gentleman from Stanton Drew Somerset and £80 premium was paid: this is rendered '1729app as Stanton Drew Som. gent's son £80'. By this date almost all apprenticeships were for the standard seven years, so duration is not given. By the mid-eighteenth century, many apprenticeships in Bristol were sponsored by charitable groups or schools. These included Bristol's county societies (e.g. Somerset Soc. or 'Ancient Britons' for the Welsh), religious groups (Sons of the Clergy to assist children of Anglican clergy, Protestant Dissenters etc), so-called 'Colston societies' (e.g. Grateful Soc.) or schools (e.g. QEH for children from Queen Elizabeth Hospital or Colston from Colston's Hospital). Where sponsorship was involved, the source/premium given is indicated. A small group of apprenticeships is recorded in the Inland Revenue (IR) stamp tax records (which survive intermittently from 1710) but not in the Bristol civic apprenticeship registers (in most cases because the master was not a freeman and so was not entitled to register apprentices). Where only an IR record survives, this is indicated by the term ‘informal’ and the IR register number is given. Otherwise, fuller details on all entries can be found in the Bristol apprenticeship registers as indexed by Bristol and Avon Family History Society (BAFHS). However, corrections to these have been made using the original entries. It should be noted that several versions of the registers were kept by the eighteenth century and they sometime vary in details given, including the spelling of names.

- c) The next date given is often the date when the person obtained the Bristol freedom, as given in the Bristol burgess books – e.g. 1752f. This is followed by an indication of how the person obtained their freedom if it was not by apprenticeship (as was most common). There were three other methods: as the son of a freeman; as the husband of the daughter or widow of a freeman; by corporation grant, usually on payment of a ‘fine’ (i.e. fee). So, Alexander Abell was freed in 1723 through marriage to the daughter of a cordwainer freeman, rendered ‘1723f as married cordwainer’s daughter’, while James Agnew paid a fine in 1762, rendered as ‘1762f by fine £8 8s’. Some people were entitled to the freedom by two methods, normally by apprenticeship and patrimony, so for example John Hargest was freed in 1733 as both the son and apprentice of his father, rendered as ‘1733f as son/app’. In a small number of cases no freedom is recorded but the person is recorded as either taking apprentices or voting in a way which implies they are a freeman by that date, so it is indicated with a ‘f. by 17xx?’
- d) The next date given (or the first one if none of a-c apply, is the earliest date known for the person to be practising in Bristol. If this predates the freedom date (as is quite common especially in the later eighteenth century) then it is given first. Where it seems likely that a person then practised continuously to a later date, then a date-range may be given here, but if other information is available or it seems likely that a person’s practice in Bristol was interrupted, then only an initial date will appear and then more information given later. Some people also only visited Bristol, either because they were itinerant practitioners or came only for a short period. This is indicated after the date to suggest that the person never became a fixed resident in Bristol: for example Samuel Angier advertised in 1751 that he was in Bristol and cured stammering: this is rendered ‘cures stammering (1751 visit)’.
- e) Where a practitioner is recorded as taking apprentices, a summary is then given of his (or her for the widows) activity, with four standard pieces of information in brackets, namely: number of apprentices/years served; total value of premiums recorded in number of cases where premiums were taken; number of such apprentices who later became freemen of Bristol; range of years when apprenticeships started. For instance, in Alexander Abell’s case he took one apprentice for 7 years (where apprentices were turned over from one master to another, the 7 years has been divided between masters), received a premium of £10 in this case, his apprentice was not freed, and was taken in 1725. So the entry reads: master (1/7; £10/1; 0f; 1725). The case of ‘informal’ apprentices recorded only in IR (or occasionally in other sources, such as those apprenticed at the Bristol Infirmary (BRI)) has been discussed under (b) above.
- f) Further dates and information may then be given, including a final date when practice is recorded – where there is no reason to think it did not continue beyond that, a + is given after the final date: so in Abell’s case he is last recorded voting in 1739 but there is no reason to think he stopped practising then, so it is rendered '1739+'.

- g) Where a year of death is known this is indicated using the format 'd.1776'. Where the date of death is likely, but not certain (for example if someone of that name died that year), this indicated by a ?, followed by indication if there is an associated will, inventory or administration bond. Most of these probate documents are held in Bristol Archives, but a substantial number were proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury (PCC) centrally and are held in the PROB11 (wills) or other PROB series at The National Archives (TNA). Note that PROB11 wills can be downloaded. So, in the case of William Ashman there is a will of a William Ashman dated 1790, but it does not specify it is this practitioner, so this is rendered: 'd.1790 will?'. In some cases there is a possible date of death, and then a later date by which it is known the person was dead. This is often because they are listed as 'deceased' when their child is apprenticed or freed. This is rendered as 'd. by [or before] 1745'.
 - h) When a religious affiliation other than Anglican is very clearly indicated by the sources, this is given, e.g 'Quaker': others may well have been nonconformist as well so it should not be assumed that everyone else was Anglican. In addition, for those people who have an Oxford Dictionary of National Biography entry, the title and online web reference of the ODNB entry is given.
3. Finally, after the bracket, and in ordinary typeface, is a list of significant other people associated with the entry. These include:
- a) medical relatives practising in Bristol (such as fathers, brothers, sons)
 - b) masters of apprentices (sometimes several if the apprentice was 'turned over' to a new master part-way through)
 - c) wives' first names (occasionally husband's) with (in brackets), if known, their surnames before marrying this person (where a widow remarries, their maiden name is also given if known)
 - d) business partners (such partnerships became increasingly common over the century). So Anthony Barrett was apprenticed to Rice Charleton senior [who appears in the Biographical Register], had a medical brother William Barrett, married Anna whose maiden name was Blandy, and was partner with fellow apothecary Standfast Smith by 1761: this is rendered 'master Rice Charleton senior brother William Barrett wife Anna (Blandy) partner with Standfast Smith by 1761'.

The masters category enables you to identify all the apprentices recorded for a particular master: so a search on 'Rice Charleton senior' would reveal the 16 apprentices he took during this period (whose details are given in full in his entry in the Biographical Register).

I have also given a few other pieces of notable information at the end of some entries, such as the names of 'patent' remedies invented by Bristolians, or famous relatives with ODNB entries.

Summary Medical Register
